FWIW

The FOMC confab breaks up this afternoon at 1400 EDT. That's enough for me to call this an "all bets are off" situation. The ADP number for April was just a touch better than the call. More importantly the March number was only revised down to 255k from the original 263k previously published. On Friday the government's numbers come out, the expectations looking like 190k vs last month's 89k. Because I tend to ruminate on these things probably more than I should, I am guessing that if there is any surprise in the number on Friday, it will likely be in a substantial upward revision in the March number. That should be good to send dollar/yen closer to 113 and keep gold under pressure. Or not.
